ON BECOMING ITAA PRESIDENT

Dream Big, Dream Together

by C. Suriyaprakash

A once shy and timid small-town boy from the south of India is now the President of the ITAA, a position first held by Eric Berne himself. How is this possible?

I attribute much of my own growth and development to my learning about and applying transactional analysis to my own life and work. When I started my TA training 21 years ago, it was out of sheer curiosity about a theory that was nonthreatening and simple yet profound. It became a way for me to understand myself, and later I asked, "Why not give to others what has been so helpful to me?"

Thus began my professional application of transactional analysis. And in the last 2 decades of my encounter with TA and the ITAA I have grown from strength to strength. I discovered TA's humanistic base, psychodynamic roots, and behavioral aspirations. I also witnessed its dexterity and growth in relational, constructivist, and cocreational ways, to mention only a few. I'm sure each ITAA member has similar stories that stand as testimony to the efficacy of transactional analysis as a model for personal growth and professional development.

The question looming large for me now is what do we, in the ITAA, do to take this high-potency tool to the doorsteps (or should I say touch screens?) of the millions of people out there who could benefit immensely from it? After all, the growth of the ITAA is intimately wedded to the growth of TA around the world.

As a theory of social psychiatry, transactional analysis has seen its popularity peak in most parts of the world and its fortunes recede somewhat over the past few decades. I wonder if it isn't our responsibility to restore it to its rightful position. The ITAA as an association also followed that trajectory, and not too far in the past was called a "sinking ship." But with the concerted efforts of the ITAA Board of Trustees over the last 5 years, steered by the able leadership of my predecessor, John Heath, we are now stable and even reviving. There is no better time for us as a community to expand our horizons and reach out to other TA associations so together we can take bold steps to fulfill our mission of building a worldwide professional network for the development of transactional analysis theory and practice.

For a long time we have been grappling with the question of what role the ITAA might play in the changing worldwide TA community. Some have asked if we are still relevant, and I now emphatically say "WE ARE!" Our dharma is to create and hold that space for individuals throughout the world who use transactional analysis and are looking for an international forum in which to connect, exchange, and learn with others. I believe there are many people who are yearning for that connection, and our task is to find innovative ways to reach out to them. This includes collaborating with regional and national TA and non-TA bodies and creating a constellation of young and aspirant professionals and lay people alike who value transactional analysis. I think we are now in a position to reach out to those who are not yet aware of TA and to educate them about its benefits as well as to develop ways to reach out to the broader public.

> "What do we, in the ITAA, do to take this high-potency tool to the doorsteps (or should I say touch screens?) of the millions of people out there who could benefit immensely from it?"

In the last Script, outgoing ITAA President John Heath wrote about what we have accomplished in the last few years and some of the things we hope to do in the future. We have many members who are committed to actualizing those aspirations, including individuals on our membership and communication committees who are gearing up to leverage new age technology and social media. And we need your input, creative ideas, and involvement to make this happen.

Please send us your ideas:

1. How can the ITAA reach out to the public at large to spread awareness of the benefits of TA?
2. How can the ITAA partner with your local/national/regional bodies and institutions in our shared mission?
3. How can the ITAA engage with wider non-TA academic and professional bodies?

We are committed to channeling, strategizing, and operationalizing viable ideas. These may be baby steps, but we all know that "the journey of a thousand miles begins with one step" (Lao Tzu).

To some, what I have proposed may sound like a dream. But we "have to dream before our dreams can come true" (APJ Abdul Kalam). And when we all dream together, we can achieve what we set out to accomplish. The steps we take today may not lead to immediate results, but we have to start now to sow the seeds, even if we might not get to enjoy their fruit in our lifetime. We are here today as the ITAA because of Berne's dream half a century ago. We have a responsibility to dream now for the next century at least! In these strife-torn times, the world needs what transactional analysis has to offer. There are many more shy and timid small-town boys and girls waiting for the tool that could potentially transform their lives. Let's reach out to them. Let's dream big. Let's dream together to make this happen!

Sydney Conference Celebrates the Power of Groups

by David Morley

The 2015 ITAA/FTAA conference, with the theme "Come Together: The Power of Group Dynamics," delivered a program that engaged and inspired from the opening keynote and welcome reception through until the last song of the closing gala dinner.

The first two keynote speakers provided a refreshing and thought-provoking (if not provocative) opening to the conference with Professor Andrew Samuels and Dr. Farhad Dalal taking opposing positions with their reflections on the nature of groups, what it really means to belong, and whether the group comes before the individual (Dalal) or whether the oppressive and conforming nature of groups restricts the potential of humans and thus whether groups are really relevant (Samuels).

If those positions weren't powerful enough, the two keynote speakers on the following days continued to impact attendees in different ways. Bill Cornell captured our hearts and minds with a speech that took us on a historical and somewhat personal journey looking at the evolution and shaping of transactional analysis through the lens of global conflict and how tragedy borne out of group conflicts and social struggles helped to define and continues to shape the very core of transactional analysis. Then on the final morning, Sari van Poelje introduced us to a new piece of research looking at what it means to be an agile team that can survive in turbulent times.

Surrounding the keynote speakers were many presentations and workshops that helped to keep the momentum alive, with a closing plenary each day facilitated by Farhad Dalal in the round.

Friday's program consisted of symposia for the four fields of transactional analysis applications: psychotherapy, counseling, educational, and organizational TA. Each symposium was led by a transactional analyst who specialized in that particular field.

During the conference, two prestigious awards were presented: the Eric Berne Memorial Award to Servaas van Beekum (presented by Thomas Steinert) and the Muriel James Award to Gordon Law (presented by John Heath).

The preconference agenda paved the way for an energized conference with a robust ITAA Board of Trustees meeting, a stimulating TA 101 workshop, and CTA/TSTA exams. The TA 101 workshop was presented by Charlotte Daellenbach and Marco Mazzetti to a group of enthusiastic participants from around the world, while one floor above the CTA and TSTA exams took place, overseen by Mandy Lacy and Thorsten Geck. (See page 6 for exam results and details.)

Following the conference, several postconference workshops were conducted: "TA for Organizations" with Mandy Lacy and Thomas Steinert, "Group Therapy: A Second-Rate Therapy?" with Farhard Dalal, and "Cocreativity In, Through, and of Groups" with Keith Tudor and Graeme Summers.

Feedback has been overwhelmingly positive on the venue, program, and friendly atmosphere of the conference.

Steff Oates Joins Script Team as New Coeditor

by Laurie Hawkes

Laurie Hawkes

Steff Oates

Here we are, 5 years post our Montreal conference celebrating the centenary of our Euhemerus, a little over 5 years since I became editor of The Script. This role has been challenging at times, and I never could have managed it without the help of managing editor Robin Fryer, memory bank and experience expert for The Script, the Transactional Analysis Journal, and the ITAA! We have worked closely together, discussing possible columns and articles, following up on leads for good material, managing a few tricky editorial situations, consulting about each submission we received. I hope in the end our efforts have resulted in a newsletter that you have enjoyed reading.

However, over the years, as the newsletter has continued to evolve and develop, we have found ourselves as a team of two sometimes stretched in time and energy. We gave some thought to the possibility of adding another coeditor, and so we were delighted when a solution presented itself in the person of Steff Oates, who is eminently qualified to serve in the coeditor role.

Steff brings a wealth of experience and skills to the job, having served in various capacities in the ITAA over many years. She has been a member of the TAJ editorial board since 2007 and has been a guest coeditor for one TAJ special theme issue and is about to guest edit another. She has authored numerous articles for the TAJ and The Script and has an intimate knowledge of the workings of the ITAA, having served as ITAA Secretary from 2009 to 2014, a particularly demanding job during a complex time. She continues to serve in various ways, including as a member of the communications and website committees. Steff also works with the TAJ team as a liaison with SAGE Publications to help with publicity efforts and trouble shooting any problems members might have, including in accessing the TAJ archive on the SAGE website.

Steff lives in Mobberley, United Kingdom, and has a private practice there offering psychotherapy and continuing professional development. She also travels to Romania, France, Switzerland, and elsewhere in Europe to do training/supervision.

Having worked and interacted with Steff in many circumstances over the last decade, I know that she has the patience, steadiness, tact, and wisdom to manage the challenges and intricacies of the job of Script coeditor. Over the past few months, she has done a few projects with us to "test out the waters," so to speak, and given that everything has worked well, she was proposed as a coeditor to the ITAA Board of Trustees. They were happy about the news and enthusiastic about her coming on board.

When asked about the new job she is taking on, Steff said, "I have been involved in editing various newsletters over the years since joining the TA community, the first one being for the Awakening Network, then the ITA News, and currently The Transactional Analyst. What draws me to the role with The Script is the opportunity to work more closely with Robin and Laurie and to facilitate enhanced communication with

ITAA members and others interested in transactional analysis. I feel particularly well placed with my roles with the TAJ team and the membership and communications committees to facilitate the exchange of ideas between members across the globe and between members and the ITAA Board of Trustees. I am eager to exchange ideas with Laurie and Robin and with them, to serve the vibrant TA community worldwide."

So, we are now a team of three and excited about this new era we are beginning. We hope our collaboration will result in an even better newsletter for the ITAA community!

Call for Papers for New TAJ Theme Issue on "Gender, Sexuality, and Identity"

Coeditors: Brad McLean and Bill Cornell

Eleven years have passed since the Transactional Analysis Journal last published a themed issue devoted to gay- and lesbian-related issues in April 2004. There has been a sea change in several areas related to the increasingly diverse community of individuals represented by the GLBTIQ acronym (gay, lesbian, bisexual, transexual, intersex, queer), now often referred to more simply and inclusively as GSD (gender and sexual diversities), a term we prefer because of the emphasis on diversity. Among these changes are many that touch on the work of transactional analysts:

- Trans identified individuals are finally coming out of the shadows.
- A post-AIDs era is informing the behaviors, values, and relational experiences of a generation of gay men who never witnessed the health crisis that informed the culture of the generation in which it occurred.
- Digital environments have reshaped GSD culture and connection.
- There have been significant developments in the science of gender.
- Gay conversion therapies have received considerable scrutiny and rendered illegal in some jurisdictions.
- The perception of perversion has changed.
- Access to pornography and its shaping role in sexuality have become significant public concerns.
- GSD people have access to IVF technology, surrogacy, and adoption in some places; same-sex families are flourishing.
- Marriage equality is emerging in parts of the Western world.
- Homosexuality is still illegal and punishable by death in a significant number of countries.

Poststructuralism, constructivism, and postmodern thinking predominates in the interpretation of culture and identity today, as does the relational paradigm, but many questions have emerged that could well be answered through reflecting on and developing transactional analysis theory. The fluidity of gender identity and sexuality has recast the way we look at our lives and sense of self. Changes in the intrapsychic and interpersonal worlds of GSD clients have significant implications for transactional analysis practitioners in all fields. Addressing these and other related issues is long overdue.

We invite contributions to this theme issue on "Gender, Sexuality, and Identity" from authors representing various perspectives and fields, including those from outside of TA. Please consult the TAJ submissions guidelines here before submitting your manuscript. And if you have questions, feel free to contact either Brad McLean at mactenn@me.com or Bill Cornell at wfcornell@gmail.com .

Appreciation to Long-Time Members

Below are the names of those individuals who are long-time ITAA members, some of them for more than 40 years. I thank them on behalf of us all for their dedication and loyalty to our global transactional analysis community. The ITAA is a direct membership organization, and we can only move forward on the basis of the continued participation and active involvement of our members. It is particularly important for us to acknowledge and honor the people who stay with us. As long-time supporters, these people have enabled our organization to continue its mission. I look forward to sharing the ITAA's development with them for many years to come.
