Membership Survey Reveals Commitment to the ITAA

by Alessandra Pierini and Alex van Oostveen

In June 2018, the ITAA invited members to participate in a survey, the intention of which was to understand the importance to members of specific ITAA activities, benefits, and structures. The results, which were presented to the Board of Trustees in Kochi last August, offer insight into members' perceptions of the ITAA as well as their expectations and desired future projects.

Alessandra Pierini

Alex van Oostveen

Participants Represented a Cross Section of the ITAA

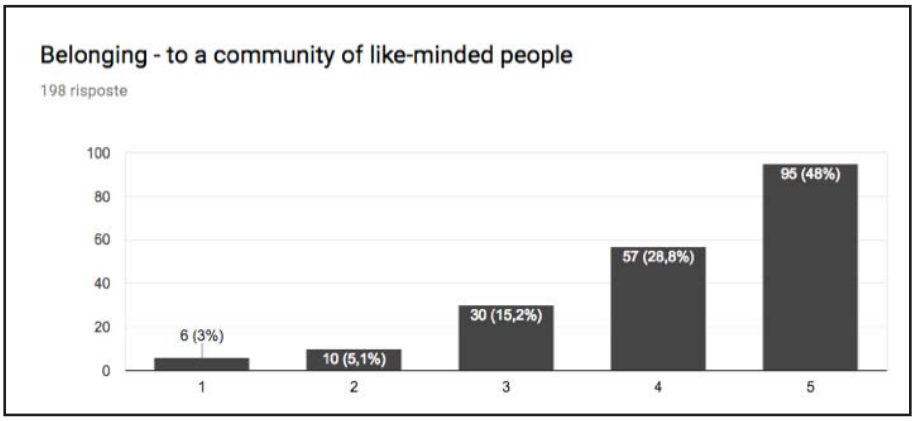
Participation in the survey was high, with 196 members responding from every part of the world: Europe 32%; Asia 23%; Australia/New Zealand 20%; USA 17%; South America 5%; and South Africa 3%. Most were Full Members (72.4%), with student members amounting to 14.3%. Each certification level was represented, with trainer member responses (PTSTA and TSTA together) totaling more than 50%. The participants' age was mostly above 51 years (52.7%), and all specializations were represented, with the psychotherapy field being the highest (59%).

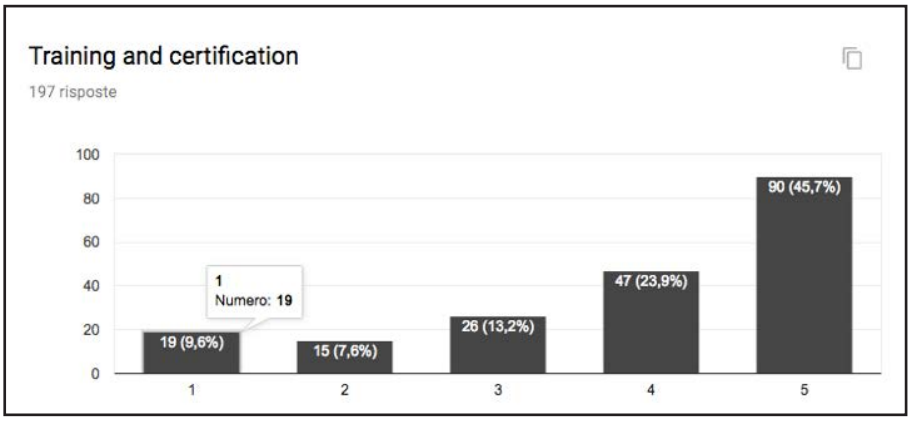
Statistical Results

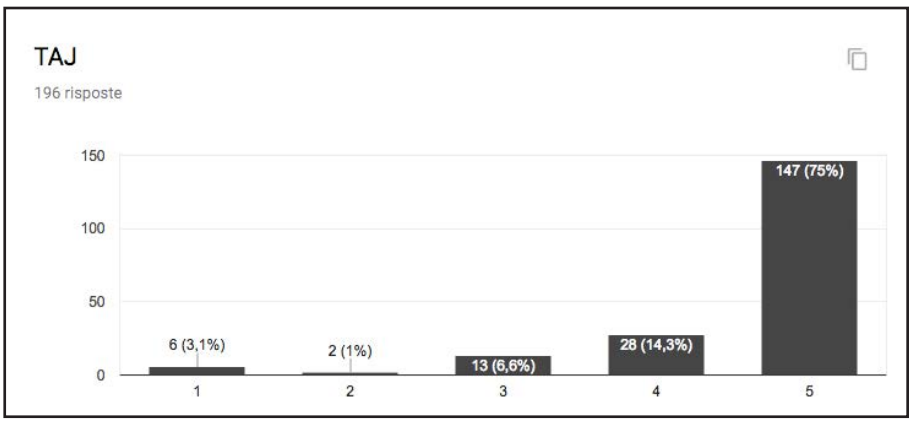
1. Most valued feature of belonging to the ITAA: Data showed the most valued features of membership were the Transactional Analysis Journal (75%), the opportunity to belong to a community (48%), and certification (45.7%).
2. TAJ access: Even though most respondents access the TAJ via digital copy (57.7%), many (44.4%) would not be satisfied if this were the only possible access.

3. Online directory: 87.3% of respondents want to be listed in an online directory of TA practitioners for public access. This listing should be free for ITAA members (95.4%) and for a fee for nonmembers (51.1%).
4. Exams and certification: The quality of the training and certification processes are appreciated by 78.3% of participants. Many members value the possibility of recognition in their field by certification. Opinions on the option to have just one worldwide body of certification for all the TA associations were clear (84.7%). Respondents thought it important for national TA associations to also have or establish their own local qualifying processes to serve local needs.
5. Interaction with the TA community: Due to global ITAA presence, participants suggested mostly online connection: 72.2 % would like webinars and online events followed by networking events online and offline (59.4%), online discussions and forums (57.8%), and Facebook and Twitter engagements (31.7%).
6. Future perspectives: 89.5% of respondents would favor one worldwide association for all TA practitioners. The key functions envisaged for such an association were: ensuring international standards of training (74.6%), TAJ (74.5%), and TA development around the world (66.7%). Moreover, 94.1% would like to increase links and agreements with other national and/or regional TA associations.

In the following three graphs, 5 indicates the most valued aspect of ITAA membership.







Survey Text Component

A significant portion of results received were responses to specific questions on ITAA features wherein members had the opportunity to freely express their ideas in general, suggest ideas for future strategies and activities, and offer their assistance in areas with which they resonated. Results pertaining to the following aspects were categorized by geographical region and related to belonging to a community of like-minded people, training and certification, The Script, the TAJ, the ITAA website, professional recognition, conferences, ways in which the ITAA could assist with certification, and other ideas. The following sections summarize some of the themes that emerged.

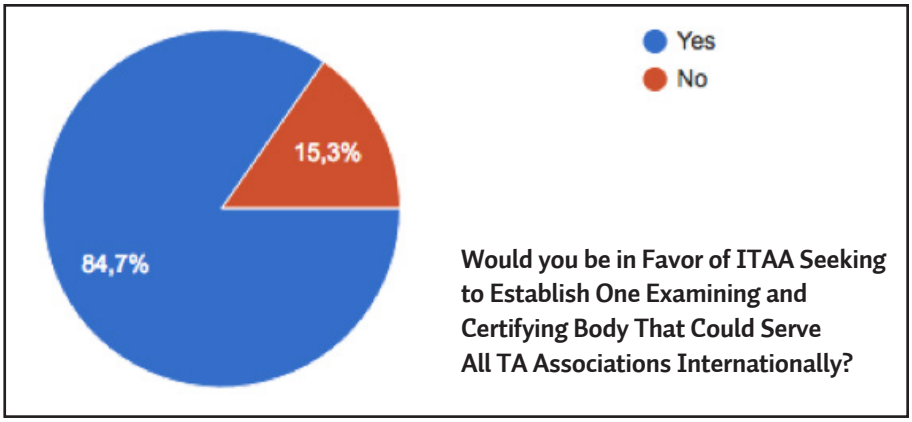
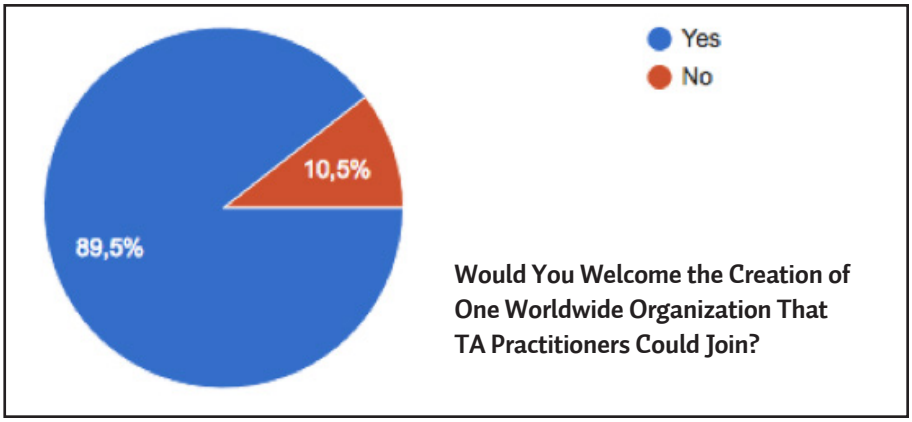
- Training and certification: Academic recognition wanted, issues with exam and certification system structure and standards, language barrier

- The Script: language barrier, less frequency, style change wanted
- The TAJ: Free/easier access wanted, language barrier, sole/main reason for ITAA membership, too academic
- The website: forum/media/social media engagement wanted, improve style/user interface, membership directory wanted
- Professional recognition: globally visible, academically recognized and standardized qualification wanted
- Conferences: easier/cheaper/more frequent access wanted
- ITAA assistance in the certification process: global and national qualification recognition, global standardization

When these results and data were presented to board in Kochi, the suggestion was made that regional trustees/representatives follow up on member comments, and they are presently working on processing member feedback specific to their region and/or national association/s. Because the responses included suggestions on strategy, complaints, offers, and requests, this will be an ongoing task.





Key Functions for the ITAA in a Worldwide Context

• TAJ	74,5% (5=Most Important)
• Newsletter	33,2% (4); 31,1% (5=Most Important)
• International standards	74,6% (5=Most Important)
• Professional Association	57,5% (5=Most Important)
• Worlwide directory	39,4% (5=Most Important)
• Link/support National/Regional TA Ass.	46,4% (5=Most Important)
• TA Delopment around the world	66,7% (5=Most Important)
• Research network	46,9% (5=Most Important)

What stood out from the survey was that the ITAA membership is energized and values the association. Membership engagement, certification, and professional recognition were recurring themes, which we are examining closely. The value of the survey to the board and members is evident in the richness of the feedback received, and we look forward to seeing tangible changes emerging from our work on this treasured engagement with ITAA members.

Call for Papers: TAJ Theme Issue on "Normativity, Marginality, and Deviance"

by Diana Deaconu and Helen Rowland, Coeditors

Diana Deaconu

Helen Rowland

Berne conceptualized transactional analysis as a social psychiatry, and the developing humanistic therapies of the time, against a backdrop of the civil rights movements of the 1960s, embraced a discourse of liberation, empowerment, and personal freedom. Influenced either explicitly or implicitly by the revolutionary zeal of liberation politics, the humanistic therapies promised to free us of our overadaptive tendencies and reveal to us our true, authentic selves (Dalal, 2016). Although Berne himself was not overtly political, his transactional analysis held a foundational assumption that we would be liberated from psychological tyranny once we found our authentic selves. As he wrote, "Each person designs his own life. Freedom gives him the power to carry out his own designs, and power gives him the freedom to interfere with the designs of others" (Berne, 1972, p. 31).

But the terrain where psychology, sociology, and politics intersect has proven to be more difficult to map than our predecessors had hoped, and the promise of finding our authentic lives within a context of deeply rooted assumptions of social normativity is not, by any means, a straightforward task. At its best, "I'm OK, You're OK" represents a deep mutual respect for each other's individual subjectivities; at its worst, it can be used to silence the dissenting voices of those who do not see their experiences of marginalization and oppression adequately represented in our theories.

Since Berne's early conceptualization of TA as a social psychiatry, we in the human sciences have felt the significant influence of postmodern and critical theories. The concepts of normal and deviant have been cogently problematized, and normative ideologies have been subjected to the critical lens of feminism, postcolonialism, queer theory, and multiple postmodern critiques. Normativity is positioned as socially produced and maintained through our unconscious participation in the persuasively naturalistic discourses of "normal" human behavior.

Some critical theorists go so far as to argue that unless we as educators, organizational consultants, counselors, and psychotherapists hold in mind an overtly conscious critique of normalcy, we unwittingly become agents of social control, our job becoming to police human behavior and to resocialize the deviants and transgressors (Parker, 1999). This is a far cry, indeed, from our founding discourses of liberation, empowerment, and freedom, which may, at times, turn into yet another tyranny. McDougall (1992) drew our attention to how psychotherapists may view self-examination as a kind of moral high ground. She wrote:

> Is it normal (not only statistically but also normatively) to put oneself into question, > to question one's cherished beliefs and their origins, to examine attentively the established orders and all one has been taught to accept without question—that is, to question the order that exists within ourselves, within our family backgrounds, or within the social group to which we belong? Most people, it must be admitted, do not ask themselves such questions. (p. 479)

In the October 2020 theme issue on "Normativity, Marginality, and Deviance," we hope to expand the scope and terms of theorizing about belonging and not belonging as well as explorations of normalcy in the broadest possible terms. We especially welcome articles from all fields of application, from multiple frames of reference, and from new authors. The deadline for submissions is 1 November 2019. Papers can be submitted by emailing Helen Rowland (helen@helenrowland.co.uk), Diana Deaconu (dianardeaconu@gmail.com), or Robin Fryer (robinfryer@aol.com).

"Standing on the Shoulders of Giants: The Parent Ego State Revisited" Now Available Online

The latest theme issue of the Transactional Analysis Journal (October 2018), coedited by Diana Deaconu and Steff Oates, is available online at https://tandfonline.com/toc/rtaj20/current. In their coeditors' letter, they write that they wanted to > invite authors to write about how they now see farther and have developed their own thinking from original ideas about the Parent ego state. . . . As you will see, our authors responded with a rich variety of articles. They cover a range of topics spanning all fields of transactional analysis, and each is strongly rooted in the author's working experience. There is appropriate acknowledgment given to our transactional analysis forebearers, and exciting new developments in theory and practice are shared. It is our hope that this theme issue offers TAJ readers the opportunity to engage with theory in a particular way, one that fosters experimentation and imagination, much like in a research lab.

The articles include the following:

- "The Sorrow of Ghosts: The Emergement of a Traumatized Parent Ego State" by Carole Shadbolt
- "It Depends on How You Hug Me: Theoretical Perspectives on the Life of an Infant and Its Family" by Cinzia Chiesa
- "For Whom Is the Teacher and for What Is the Teaching? An Educational Reframe of the Parent Ego State" by Giles Barrow
- "Using Transactional Analysis to Help Foster Parents Develop Therapeutic Parenting Skills" by Mica Douglas
- "Values-Based Leadership and the Organizational Parent System" by Maarten Kouwenhoven
- "Managing the Therapeutic Relationship: Parental Roles" by Phil Anthony
- "The Mirror Exercise and the Restructuring of the Parent-Child Relational Unit" by Adrienne Lee

We hope readers will find these articles interesting and stimulating. As always, we would love to hear your comments and thoughts. Please direct them to either Diana Deaconu (dianardeaconu@gmail.com), Steff Oates (lcfan@me.com), or Robin Fryer (robinfryer@aol.com).

Lucy Freedman Appreciates Service Award

Dear Diane (Salters),

I just arrived home from a retreat and found the box with the 2018 ITAA Service Award waiting for me. I feel deeply honored and recognized by the association I have been involved with for the greater part of my life. My path with ITAA has connected me with many friends and colleagues with whom I feel a kinship. I don't think many organizations create the worldwide linkage of OK-OK relationships that we share. In addition to the important contributions we recognize in the theory and practice of TA, it is good to recognize the ongoing work that you and I and others who serve ITAA do. I hope this encourages up-and-coming leaders to bring their visions to life in ITAA. For my part, I expect I'll continue to learn and grow with you all for many more years. I want to say a special thanks to my good friend and colleague Gloria Noriega for initiating this award for me, and please convey my appreciation to the ITAA Board for this honor.

With great pleasure,
Lucy Freedman

Two EATA Gold Medals were presented during the July 2018 EATA Theory Development and Research Conference in London. Dmitri Shustov, TSTA-P, received the EATA Gold Medal for his contribution to transactional analysis in Russia, Europe, and the world. He founded the Ryazan Association for Transactional Analysis in 1994, has served as an EATA Council delegate, and contributed to making TA more accessible in Russia through conferences and seminars. In addition, he has done significant research on TA, especially in relation to alcohol dependence, a serious problem there (he has also published articles about his research in the TAJ). Jean-Pierre Quazza was honored for the research work he has published himself, but also for his efforts to make sure that the French-language TA journal AAT survived. It was noted that he has been committed to working with other European transactional analysts and to fostering cooperation with them, especially the German TA community. Jean-Pierre has also served as an EATA Council member, as vice president of the French TA association (IFAT), and as vice president of EATA.

Sylvie Monin, TSTA-C, was honored with the EATA Bronze Medal for her outstanding contributions to EATA over the past 8 years. She has served on the Council as the Swiss delegate and for the last 6 years as vice president of the executive committee. Sylvie herself noted three particular projects of which she is particularly proud: organizing the 2016 EATA conference in Geneva on the theme "Identity, Integration, Boundaries"; encouraging EATA financial support for the Transactional Analysis Journal; and encouraging the vision of a worldwide TA association. In her comments in the November 2018 EATA Newsletter, Sylvie said, "Today I feel deeply honored and proud to have received the EATA Bronze Medal with the mention 'in recognition for her numerous contributions to the development of EATA as a professional organization by initiating and contributing to policies as EATA Vice President and delegate for Switzerland, and by building bridges between the European and international TA communities."

Keynote Speakers and Postconference Presenters Announced

by Emily Keller and Lucy Freedman

Graham Barnes

Valerie Batts

Rokelle Lerner

Sari van Poelje

Giles Barrows

Bill Cornell

Peter Pearson and Ellyn Bader

The conference committee is pleased to announce the keynote speakers and postconference workshops for the 2019 TA conference on "Promoting Equality and OKness: Healing the Divisions in Our World." The conference is cosponsored by the Southeast Institute for Group and Family Therapy, the International Transactional Analysis Association (ITAA), and the USA Transactional Analysis Association (USATAA) and will take place in Raleigh, North Carolina, USA, 31 July to 3 August 2019.

The keynote speakers include veteran transactional analysts Dr. Valerie Batts and Dr. Graham Barnes. Dr. Batts is a cofounder of VISIONS Inc. and currently serves as vice president of training and development. Dr. Barnes founded the Fellowship for Racial and Economic Equality, which later became the Southeast Institute for Group and Family Therapy. We are also pleased that Rokelle Lerner, author of The Object of My Affection Is in My Reflection: Coping with Narcissists, will also do a keynote. Each of these presenters will draw on his or her particular expertise to highlight aspects of the conference theme.

We have also just confirmed an exciting roster of postconference institutes to be held on 4 August. The four institutes will be presented by Drs. Pete Pearson and Ellyn Bader of the Couples Institute and coauthors of In Quest of the Mythical Mate; Dr. Sari Van Poelje, director of Intact and editor of TA-O; Giles Barrow, coauthor of Educational Transactional Analysis; and William Cornell, author of At the Interface of Transactional Analysis, Psychoanalysis, and Body Psychotherapy: Clinical and Theoretical Perspectives.

Before the conference, there will be TA examinations and the ITAA Board Meeting, and during the conference, please attend the ITAA Annual General Membership meeting.

We look forward to providing more details about these presenters soon. For more information and the call for proposals, visit www.taconference2019.com. Please consider contributing your valuable experience as a presenter; proposals are due 31 January. We hope to see you in Raleigh!

Participants from workshop Gloria Noriega presented in Beijing, China

Gloria Noriega, PhD, TSTA (psychotherapy), former ITAA President and recipient of the 2008 Eric Berne Memorial Award, was invited by Dr. Tian Bao to teach TA in China. From 16-18 June 2018, she presented on "The Emotional Legacy of Our Ancestors" to students in the Psychology College at Capital Normal University in Beijing. The aim of the workshop was to reveal the impact of family scripts delivered across generations on the growth of adolescents. Workshop contents included the concept and importance of transgenerational scripts, how they are formed, how to identify and treat them, family secrets, cognitive neuroscience, and script physis. Thirty-five experts and scholars from Beijing, Taiwan, Guangzhou, Shenzhen, Shanghai, Nanjing, Chengdu, Wuhan, Hangzhou, and other parts of China as well as some nearby countries took part in the workshop and engaged in warm, in-depth discussions. Gloria's systematic and rigorous curriculum design, extensive and profound professional quality, and humorous and ironic training style were highly praised by the trainees. Gloria writes, "I hope this experience was as rewarding for this lovely group as it was for me. I want to thank several people: first, Dr. Tian Bao and his team for taking such good care of me; Zhao Yahuan for organizing the event so well; my wonderful translator Jaimie, who is fluent in both languages and a young Chinese psychologist studying for her doctorate in Houston; and the participants, whose questions gave me the opportunity to share my professional and personal experiences about my lifelong development in the ITAA. During the workshop, I had the chance to meet some of the students who had been trained over several years by Thomas Ohlsson (Sweden) and to experience once more the powerful international network of colleagues and friends that we share in the ITAA. I also appreciated following in the footsteps of other colleagues who had been previously invited by Tian Bao to teach workshops in Beijing, including Stephen Karpman (USA), Julie Hay (UK), Vann Joines (USA), and Jutta Kreyenberg (Germany). I feel honored to contribute to the development of TA in China."

Group enjoying themselves at the 2018 TA Association of Japan conference reported that they experienced "the power of the communication without words," that they found new ways to express themselves, that they want to participate in conferences again, and for those new to TA, that they "want to learn TA from now on."

The 31st Annual Conference of the TA Association of Japan (TAAJ) was held on 16-17 June in Tokyo with the theme of "Taking Advantage of Sensitivity." Haired Mazama, Conference Chair, writes that on the first day, the keynote address was "Music Therapy and Sensitivity" with Ms. Macaca Cebidae, a music therapist who trains young music therapists. She presented a general review of music therapy and some movies and audio tapes regarding its use. She discussed improvisation, the making of melody, and creating songs and provided some sessions with the audience using musical instruments as sound building blocks. In the afternoon there were two programs: a TA lecture on "Tell Me What TA Is" by Ms. Yobo Mori (CTA-P) and a workshop on "Contracting Matrix and Its Application" with Kuniharu Ogawa (PTSTA-P). Yoko's lecture was for people who were unfamiliar to TA, and in his workshop, Kuni discussed the Sills contracting matrix and the contracting method in terms of contemporary TA perspectives.

On the second day, there were two workshops: "A Collage Experience" with Mr. Kanemaru (CTA-P) and "Listening: A Physical Voice" with Takayuki Muroki (PTSTA-P). Both presentations were designed to foster self-understanding and to use various senses (sensitivity), including the physical sense. In the afternoon, "Human Relationship in Playing Musical Instruments" with conference chair, Haired Mazama, explored how through playing music with drums, percussion, guitars, and other instruments, participants could experience real human relationships for the purpose of living together in an "I'm OK, You're OK" spirit and reconfirming the quality of the self.
